Dear Readers,
On a recent trip I made, we discussed the joy of gifting.
Not just the happiness we feel when we give something special to family or friends, but also the happiness we feel in doing something nice for someone unknown to us. Perhaps gifting a packet of biscuits to that little boy on the road or planting a shrub at the local garden or helping someone carry a heavy load. Perhaps it is that small moment when we feel as grand as Santa Claus for just the smiles we bring around. Whatever the case, gifts are always welcome, both to the giver and the receiver.

On the same trip, we also discussed the many people around the globe who believe in doing one nice thing a day, especially for a complete stranger. Talk about being a Secret Santa (that game we play during Christmas where we gift a friend something anonymously) all year round! What's more, spreading happiness is known to keep people healthy. Just ask the scientists! So I am planning to keep my eyes peeled for my chance to do a good deed? Are you?

And when you have done that, write to us. Write just like that. Tell us how you are spending the hot, summer months. What are you watching? What are you reading? What are you playing? Talk about any random thing or things that make you happy. Let's share our happiness 😊

Happy holidays,

Yours affectionately,

Rajani

LONG AGO IN ANCIENT GREECE...

"The way I try to come up with stories is by taking several ideas that haven't worked out and forcing them to gel. I think it really helps to have unique experiences in doing this, so that you're rich in uncommon 'source' ideas to derive 'new' ones from. I also like myths, and I often wonder how some of them might be relevant today..."

 "...The Idea Thief" came about while I was thinking about the mythical muses and about what inspiration might actually consist of." – Anupam Arunachalam, Writer

"I really enjoyed working on this story. It was so much fun to research Greek culture. I had never drawn Greek characters and frankly when I received the script it was all 'Greek' to me! :D" – Ajitesh Bhattacharjee, Artist

"It was cool lettering this story because I experimented a lot with the fonts to achieve that 'Greek' effect. Also, for the muses, I used actual Greek alphabets. So don't try deciphering them!:D" – Pranay Bendre, Letterer

You Be the Detective

WINDOW OF OPPORTUNITY

There was a robbery at Takshila Apartments. Around 8 p.m., flat number 401 had all its valuables stolen. The family had been out for dinner.

The information at hand has led the police to believe that it is an inside job, a crime committed by one of the neighbours. The police have asked each resident for their alibi. However one alibi doesn't quite add up. Can you spot who is responsible for the theft?

 'The Angry Sea' is probably the most wonderful legend I have heard about a lake, and I am so glad Radha shared it with us. I really enjoyed creating the drama along with the humour in this story. — Shruti Dave, Scriptwriter

"The characters and atmosphere just popped into my mind while reading this funny little story for the first time. Illustrating the King and his minister was an experience. On one hand, the King had just one intention—to attack anything, so I made him a flat character (having no deep thoughts)..."

 ...On the other hand, his minister has no choice but to obey his king and thus is elongated a bit where he is pulled between common sense and His Majesty's desires. I sincerely hope the readers will enjoy the story and drawings as much as I did!
- Nikhil Salvi, Artist

 While reading about Chilka, India's largest brackish water lake, I came across this paper on marine archaeology which spoke of legend, history, mythology, geography and the writing of great travellers, all around the lake. At the end of it, I knew the legend of the lake had to be written, and so were born the village folk who defeat King Raktabahu with brain as opposed to brawn. - Radha H.S., Sender of the tale

"This was my concept and so as an artist it was a great honour to draw a character I had conceptualized. I've experimented a bit with the panels and the look of the characters."

"The art style of this story is very different. That made it more challenging when I began to colour the story."

- Akshay Khadilkar, Colourist

THERE WASN'T. TAMMY WAS SMART AND LEARNED FAST... THE NEXT MONTH WAS A BUSY ONE FOR VICKTOR. HE TAUGHT TAMMY EVERYTHING...

 "This story is different from others because of its shaky speech bubbles. Probably because my hands were shaking while lettering.:D"
- Prasad Sawant, Letterer

 "What if there was a vampire who liked ketchup instead of blood?" And that immediately caught my fancy. The result - 'The Need to Feed! I sure hope this story feeds your need for horror gone loopy. Burrrp!" – Dolly Pahlajani, Writer

IT'S TIME FOR THE

WHAT DO YOU THINK,

ANY GOOD?

I DON'T THINK
SO, PRATSKY.
THESE OLD EARS
HAVE HEARD IT
ALL. I COULD
PRACTICALLY
SLEEP THROUGH THIS CONCERT.

I AGREE. THE MUSIC THESE DAYS
HAS NO NOVELTY OR INSPIRATION.

'Crickets make a lot of noise at night,' pointed out Rajani randomly once. 'Maybe because they are having a music fest,' suggested I excitedly. And that's exactly how I started to write this story. 'Making Music' is random, fun and mad!'

 "I personally love to draw animal stories. So when this script landed on my desk, I was very excited, since it was different from the regular Tinkle stories I normally illustrate." – Archana Amberkar, Artist

*"I really liked the cuteness of the characters. The illustrations are wonderful just like the sweetness and simplicity of the story.
As suggested by Savio, I tried to keep the colouring simple and avoided going overboard to retain the cuteness."*

I DRIFTED IN AND OUT...

...TOSSSED AND TURNED.

SOMETHING WAS WATCHING ME.

OR WAS I WATCHING SOMETHING?

AND THEN
I WAS THERE.

WHAT?! WHY, THAT WICKED
WITCH IS TORTURING THEM!

"I have always had weird, weird dreams, right from the time I could remember. Some of them were so scary and freaky that they have kept me up some nights. So what are dreams? I'd like to believe it is the brain having fun mixing and matching (and adding in its two bits!) all the images, thoughts, sounds, smells and sensations it is bombarded with all..."

POOF!

...through our waking hours. Not all of it is fun and not all of it makes sense but I also know we can control some of our dreams, after all they are the products of our own imaginations. I have had great fun with daydreams...

SURE, RIGHT.
JUST STAY OUT
OF MY WAY.

BUT —

GREAT, ROOH! NOW
YOU'VE GONE AND CHANGED
YOUR DREAMSCAPE. LIRA
WILL JUST LOVE THIS. CANDY
FLOSS, THAT'S HER!

WHO'S LIRA? THAT LOVELY FAIRY YOU HAD
TRAPPED? AND HOW DO
YOU KNOW MY NAME?

THIS IS YOUR DREAM AND YOU
DON'T EVEN KNOW IT! YOU CREATED
US AND GAVE US OUR POWERS. THAT
'LOVELY FAIRY' IS MY FLUFF-HEAD
OF A TWIN, LIRA. LIRA-MIRA —
THAT'S US WITH RHYMING NAMES.

YOU TRAPPED YOUR OWN
TWIN, MIRA?! AND WHAT
ABOUT THAT FLOWER?

“...Dreams, nightmares or daydreams, they have sure proven to be fertile ground for some of my stories. So I thought, why not a story on dreams? :D” – Rajani Thindiat, Writer

MY DARLING TWIN WAS ONLY TRYING TO DESTROY YOUR PRECIOUS WORLD. WITH THAT DREAM-SHATTERER YOU CALL A FLOWER.

I DON'T BELIEVE YOU. SHE LOOKED SO SWEET AND DELICATE. WHY WOULD SHE DO THAT?

SHE IS DELICATE IN THE HEAD, THAT'S WHY! WHAT DO YOU THINK? BECAUSE SHE THINKS DREAMS ARE 'NOT NICE'. BUT DREAMS AND REALITY ARE INTERLINKED. YOU DESTROY ONE AND YOU DESTROY THE OTHER.

"Magic and fantasy have always fascinated me since childhood and the decision to take up this particular story was purely a call from a young heart. Nothing comes close to enhancing the magic of a fantasy tale through visual storytelling. Hope the children and the 'child in you' enjoy this as much as I did creating it." – Sini Chandrasenan, Artist

MY SISTER CAN BE SO MELODRAMATIC SOMETIMES. DESTROY YOUR DREAMS INDEED. WHO WANTS RANDOM, PUZZLING, BIZARRE IMAGES AND SCENES RUINING THEIR SLEEP?

BUT SHE IS RIGHT; I DON'T WANT ALL MY DREAMS DESTROYED. CAN'T YOU DESTROY ONLY MY BAD DREAMS?

BAD DREAMS, GOOD DREAMS, THEY ARE ALL THE SAME, ROOH. COME, LET ME USE THIS DREAM SHATTERER ON YOU. IT IS FOR YOUR OWN GOOD.

THAT'S VERY IRRITATING TO HEAR YOU KNOW. AND IT'S PATRONIZING!

YOU ARE TOO YOUNG TO KNOW WHAT'S GOOD FOR YOU. COME HERE NOW OR I WILL HAVE TO USE FORCE.

SHE IS CRAZY! MIRA WAS RIGHT AFTER ALL.

BUT HOW DO I STOP HER? MIRA TOLD ME NOT TO BELIEVE HER.

NO, SHE SAID NOT TO BELIEVE IN HER. THEY ARE ALL CHARACTERS OF MY OWN IMAGINATION.

"For such an imaginative story, the need for colourful balloons was a must. Therefore, I also imagined a new set of speech balloons." – Pranay Bendre, Letterer

BUT I'VE SOMETHING BETTER UP MY SLEEVE. I'LL SHOW THEM WHAT 'KIDS' ARE CAPABLE OF!

YOU HAVE COME TO YOUR SENSES, ROOH?

NO, BUT I KNOW I CAN CHOOSE TO NOT BELIEVE IN YOU.

WHAT HAPPENS THEN? YOU AND THIS DREAM WORLD VANISH IN A POOF?

YOU WOULDN'T BE SO CRUEL.

BUT NOT BELIEVING IN YOU IS TOO TAME AN END FOR THIS DREAM. THIS IS MY DREAM AFTER ALL.

OOOH, I LOVE DREAMS. THIS ONE AT ANY RATE.

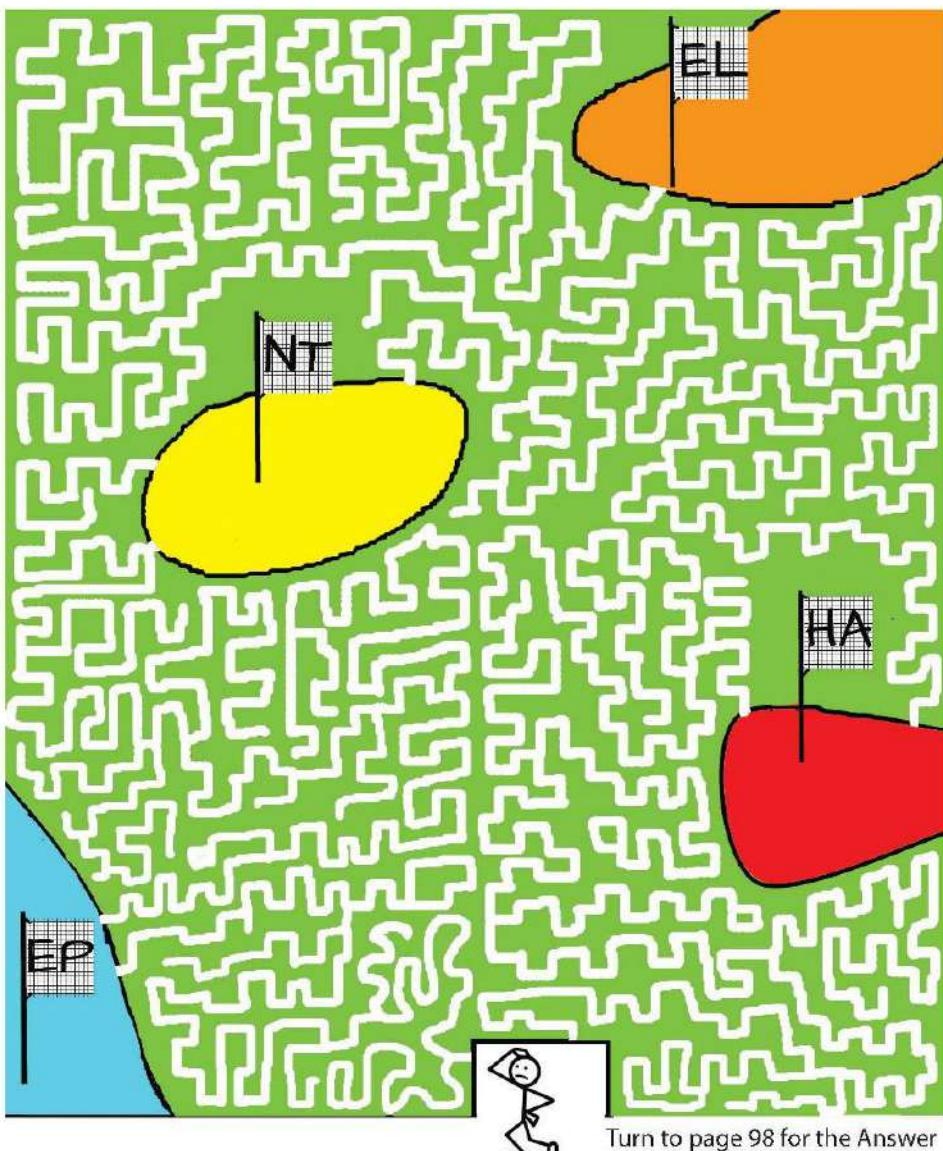

NO!

ROTAN'S CYCLE RACE

Story

Sahil Upalekar

Letters
Pranay Bendre

 "I get my story ideas from everyday life. Life is full of all kinds of interesting incidents and if one keeps one's eyes and ears open to gather such moments, a story takes shape. 'Rotan's Cycle Race' happened the same way..."

 ...One day, from my balcony I saw a man trying to ride a cycle but all his efforts were useless as he kept falling off. That sight gave me the basic idea. The other characters like Khamkha were also inspired from real-life people. Some facts and some imagination helped me weave the story together." — Manoshi Roy, Writer

A FEW DAYS AND A LOT OF PRACTICE LATER,
IT WAS THE DAY OF THE COMPETITION—

"It was a lot of fun reading Manoshi Roy's story and even more so scripting it. This story is full of laughs, giggles and tickles. I hope the readers enjoy it too." – Shruti Dave, Scriptwriter

"I liked all the characters of this story. Poor Rotan! He fulfilled everyone's wishes and got a bump on his head for all his troubles. Very funny and mood-lightening!" – Sahil Upalekar, Artist

ISN'T THAT GREAT, PAPA? OUR LITTLE VILLAGE IS GETTING FAMOUS!

A ROOM OF ONE'S OWN

-SVANI PAREKH

Deep in the shroud of midnight, tiny scratch-scratch-scratch noises filtered through the cricket's nightlife and the infuriating sounds of oblivious snoring. Hidden underneath a thick blanket, with a flashlight propped in the crook of her arm, Veda was scribbling away on a note pad, muttering feverishly...

Sweeping across the stormy deck, the duchess stretched out to touch the beautiful alabaster face, splayed with colour, and declared magnificently...

"GIGGLE! GIGGLE! HEHEHE! OOOH, CHOCOLATE CAKE!"

Veda threw the blanket off and glared down her bunk bed towards the floor of her dormitory. Her flashlight caught a circle of girls wearing nightgowns and expressions of unmistakable glee that could only mean one thing... MIDNIGHT FEAST!

"KEEP IT DOWN!" Veda growled. "I'm trying to win a Booker Prize here!" "This is a dormitory. Get used to it, Shakespeare," Shilpi replied gaily, waving a piece of chocolate cake in the air. "Writers write in crowded places, right? Cafes, parks, err... train stations? It stimulates the brain and all!"

"But I want to be like Woolf."

"Real or... umm... the full-moon type?" Shilpi looked about nervously. She never knew what people who fancied themselves writers wanted.

Veda's jaw dropped. "No! The WRITER! Virginia Woolf! The writer who said, 'A woman must have money and a room of her own if she is to write fiction.'

Shilpi shrugged, "Well, I guess she never lived in a dorm. Come on, loosen up... take a swig of some..." she looked at a juice container, "...expired juice. Hmmm... who was in charge of the drinks?"

"ENOUGH!" Veda pushed her giggling dorm-mates out of the door, loading their arms with tetra packs of juice, "Why don't you go into the next room for your feast? Here, take my juice packs."

"Hey, that's awfully generous of..."

"Just go!"

Veda's dorm-mates hustled off, gleeful with their extorted fresh-ish juice and Veda hissed, "Quiet! Don't wake Matron up!"

In the fresh, silent wake of their departure, Veda rubbed her eyes and stared blearily at the scribbles on her notepad.

"Yes, so... The Duchess magnificently proclaims, "Oh silver spinning stars! Oh terrible threads of my past, twining around my solitary soul..."

THUD! THUD! THUDDDD!

"Whaaaa...?!"

 "When I was in school, I was quite fascinated by the idea of living in a hostel with friends. So I was quite excited when this story came to me for illustrations. I read the story twice before finalizing the most interesting (and important) visuals for the story. And I thought about my childhood pals while creating the characters. I particularly enjoyed drawing the toothless Matron."
— Anupama Apte, Artist

Veda grabbed her watch; the display read 3:07 A.M.

THUDDDDDD!

The bed was shaking, the sound was drilling into her brain. She sat up and shone her light into the dorm...

"Guys?"

The girls were scrambling back into the room, armed with uneaten goodies.

"Godzilla!" Shilpi moaned.

Veda tiptoed to the door, opened it slightly, and... caught her breath quickly.

"The main door is open!" She shrieked, slamming the door shut.

"What?!" Shilpi gibbered. "But that's... that's..."

"This is a serious breach of security," the hefty Divya intoned, picking up her hockey stick meaningfully. "Time for the Special Dorm Crime Unit to step..."

Veda stopped her, "Hang on. I suspect a seriously incompetent cat burglar or... a scientist robbed of his life's work, stripped of his Secret Formula, bound and left in the water tank of the building, where he is banging his feet against the pipes to attract attention."

"I say it's a stinking thief!" Divya yowled, ready for battle, when—

THUPP!

And a low moan sounded. An elderly, feminine moan.

"Ghost!" howled Shilpi, now positively green.

Veda bravely opened the door a crack and found herself staring right at... Matron.

Veda sucked in her breath. Catching sight of Matron on the night of a Midnight Feast, when telltale crumbs littered the floor, the smell of fresh oranges wafted through the air and the girls were stuffed with cold drinks and garlic chips, was in itself enough to strike fear in the stoutest of hearts. But this nightmare had ambition; it had spun out much worse than that...

Matron was dressed in a flowing white nightgown. Her frizzy hair was crawling out from underneath a tight cap, and her dentures were conspicuous in their absence. And most importantly... she was wielding a huge wooden stick.

Veda let out a strangled squeak before she quickly covered her mouth to muffle it. But it was enough.

"Veda!" Matron turned on her, her eyes gleaming maniacally.

"No, it wasn't me, I..."

Matron lifted the stick with a vengeance.

Veda screamed. Matron brought it down with a deafening...

THUP.

On. The. Floor.

It's tough to write in a dormitory. It's tough to write with roommates around. It's also tough to write when the traffic's howling, when a pesky sibling's yowling, when a neighbour's party is loud, or when your stomach's growling. There are so many annoyances interrupting your "literary masterpiece", that you finally...

"What are you doing?" Veda gasped in painful relief, as the other girls squeezed their heads through to see.

"Rat!" Matron snarled, through gritted teeth.

"Someone ratted on you guys!" Veda hissed softly to her dorm-mates.

"Clean up! I'll handle Matron." Divya nodded, still armed with her hockey stick, as the girls frantically cleaned the crumbs littering the floor.

Veda turned on the charm and confidence like a gushing tap.

"Matron, I don't know what anyone's told you but I assure you—nothing's going on here."

The Matron looked at her with wild, glinting eyes. "The plague is here! I can see those dirty crumbs and that sickening food and..."

"Plague? Oh, come on, let's not exaggerate... it was just some fun!"

FUN! FUN?! All that disgusting running through the drains!"

Veda blinked mid-protest; something didn't ring quite right about that sentence. Then, it struck her.

"Oh you mean an actual rat?"

Matron snarled, whipping her stick around the ground, "As Matron of a dorm, I have better things to do than fantasize about rats! So, yes, I mean an actual rat!"

"There's no rat here, Matron," Veda said softly, then nodded at the stick. "Err... are you trying to lure one here with a... mating call? And if so, may I ask why?"

Divya nudged her, "Veda..."

"Quiet, I'm taking care of it."

"The rat is back!" Matron was suddenly wailing and thumping vindictively on the floor. "It ate the fruits on my table!"

"Ohoho! The rat's quite the enterprising soul, eh? Hehehe!" Veda chuckled, trying to lighten the mood, elbowing Matron in the stomach and leading her away from the dorm. "Stop gargling at me!" Matron snapped, rubbing her tummy.

"There! I saw it! I saw it!" Veda chirped, pointing at a corner of the hallway far away from their room and watching as Matron galloped away. "Well, good luck, I hope you get it!"

And she slammed the door shut. "Check the room for a rat! Pronto!" she barked.

The girls, standing on top of their beds, armed with deodorants and various sports rackets and sticks, gave a quick cursory glance around the room. "Negative! Nada! Zero!" came the replies.

"Great. Then we all just get back to snoozaroo. Oh, wait..." Veda opened the door carefully and said, "You know you could call pest-control, they're good at this sort of thing."

 "...just can't think of anything else, and write about the annoyances themselves...tada! These annoyances suddenly throw off their cloaks, and reveal that they are fun stories in disguise, banging on your door! This (incredibly late) realization inspired me to write 'A Room of One's Own'." — Svani Parekh, Writer

The Matron looked at Veda like she was glistening, drenched in superhuman intelligence and boundless kindness.

"Good idea, Veda," she said tearfully, patting Veda on the head. "You were always one of my favourites." And she strode purposefully to the hallway phone like a guided missile, making parting thuds along the way.

Veda sleepily made her way to her bed and picked up her sheaf of papers. "Good grief, I bet Virginia Woolf never had to put up with this nonsense! Hmm... now where was I? Yes, the Duchess drew herself up and..." She began writing feverishly again...

The clock ticked away obliviously as Veda scribbled. The rest of the dorm slept in peace... until—

"Hey! Wake UP! Wake UP!" came the hiss into Shilpi's ear. Shilpi glared at her clock, which blinked that it was 5:23 A.M.

"Go away," Shilpi moaned, covering her head with her pillow. Dawn was stealing firmly into the room.

"No, you need to hear this!" Veda squeaked.

Shilpi, Divya and the rest of the girls woke up, bleary-eyed and angry.

"What?!" Shilpi growled.

Veda shuffled her papers and cleared her throat theatrically.

"The story of the brave young girl who saved her entire dorm from The Rat's Wrath—Veda the Rat Warrior."

She beamed expectantly at her friends, who seemed decidedly less than thrilled.

"What about me?" Shilpi enquired, in a tone that indicated she was just below boiling point.

"I protected you," growled Divya, wielding her hockey stick meaningfully.

"Hey... the important thing is I realized that if I had a room of my own, this important story would have been lost forever!" Veda began, as her dorm-mates started to pelt her with anything they could lay their hands on. "I can still win that Booker!"

"I'll show you a Booker!" came the warm reply as a thick Maths textbook went flying over her head.

Veda hopped to the safety of her high bunk bed. A hairbrush whacked her on the head, and she froze, struck... both literally and...

"Ooh, all this tumult and beautiful chaos... it just gave me a fantastic new idea!"

And she picked up her pen and began to scribble again. And so the persecuted hero fled for her life...

 "I've always liked the idea of Suppandi as a superhero because he would be the most unconventional superhero around. That's why I took well-known superhero traits (rescuing a cat from a tree) and applied them to Super Suppandi to see how he would fare in such situations." — Sean D'mello, Writer

 "I love trees and Super Suppandi, so the coming together of both these things made this story very special for me. This story is filled with energy and acceleration; these two factors make the story both appealing and challenging to me as an artist."

PLAY BY YOURSELF

Stretch your play time this summer with a cool Play Tent that will be your own playground and your umbrella under the hot, summer sun!

What you need:

- 1 old bed sheet
- 1 long rope
- 4 heavy objects (that are not valuable or breakable)
- 1 old dupatta/shawl (optional)
- 2 clothes pegs (optional)

What to do:

- 1) Fold the bed sheet into half.
- 2) Place the rope along the fold of the bed sheet.
- 3) Tie the ends of the rope to the opposite corners of your room, at a height. Alternately, if you are doing this outdoors, you can tie the ends of the rope between two trees.

- 4) Place the heavy objects (can be bricks or stones, if outdoors) on the four corners of the bed sheet, by wrapping them at the ends, in such a way that the bed sheet is weighed down and rooted to the floor.
- 5) You can also take a light dupatta and clip it at the entrance of your tent to form a curtain.

And you are done! You have your own play tent now. Turn it into a library by putting books and comics inside, or make a picnic spot by having a basket full of treats, or your personal playground with toys and board games inside, and have fun! You can also do this outdoors, if you have a garden or some free, clean and safe space in your building.

Letters Satyawan Rane

"Since childhood, if there's one character in Tinkle I've really been into, it's got to be Tantri. This guy is not your everyday 'goody-goody' protagonist. He is as crooked as it gets. So when I was told that I'd be drawing Tantri ..."

"...and the gang for the Holiday Special, I decided to give him a tinge of extra wickedness. And Dolly's story writing and plots are so sinister, the evil'er Tantri fits right into it! The right dose of villainy!" – Abhijeet Kini, Artist

AND ATTACKED MY ARMY FROM THE SKY.

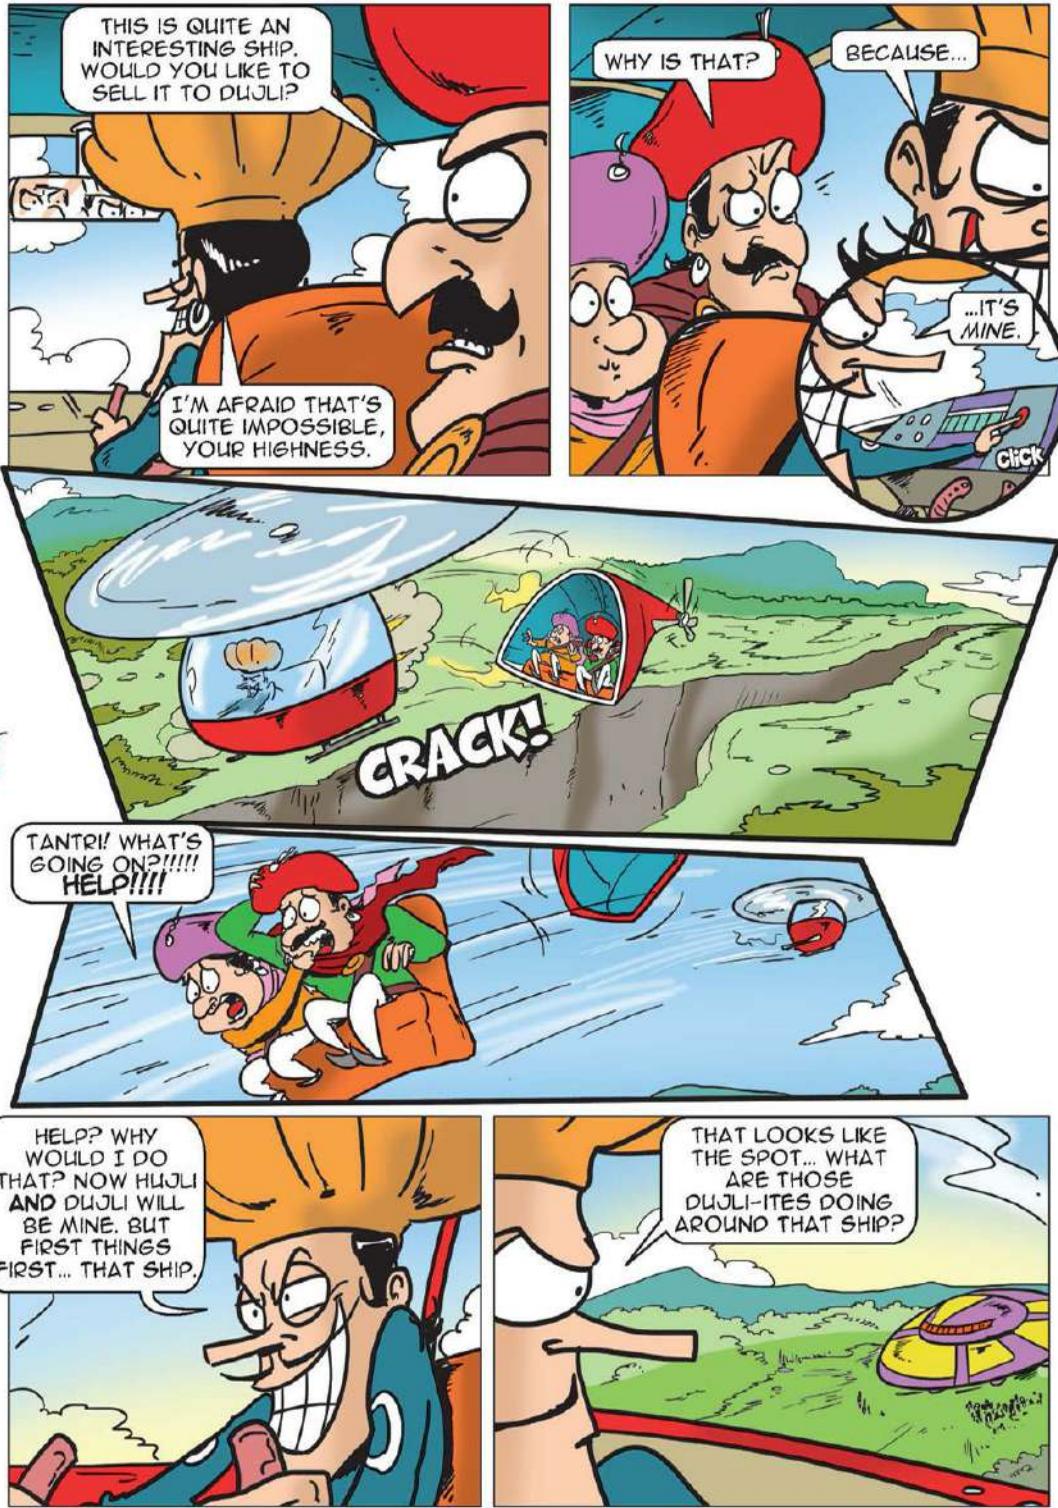

LET'S GO, YOUR MAJESTIES.

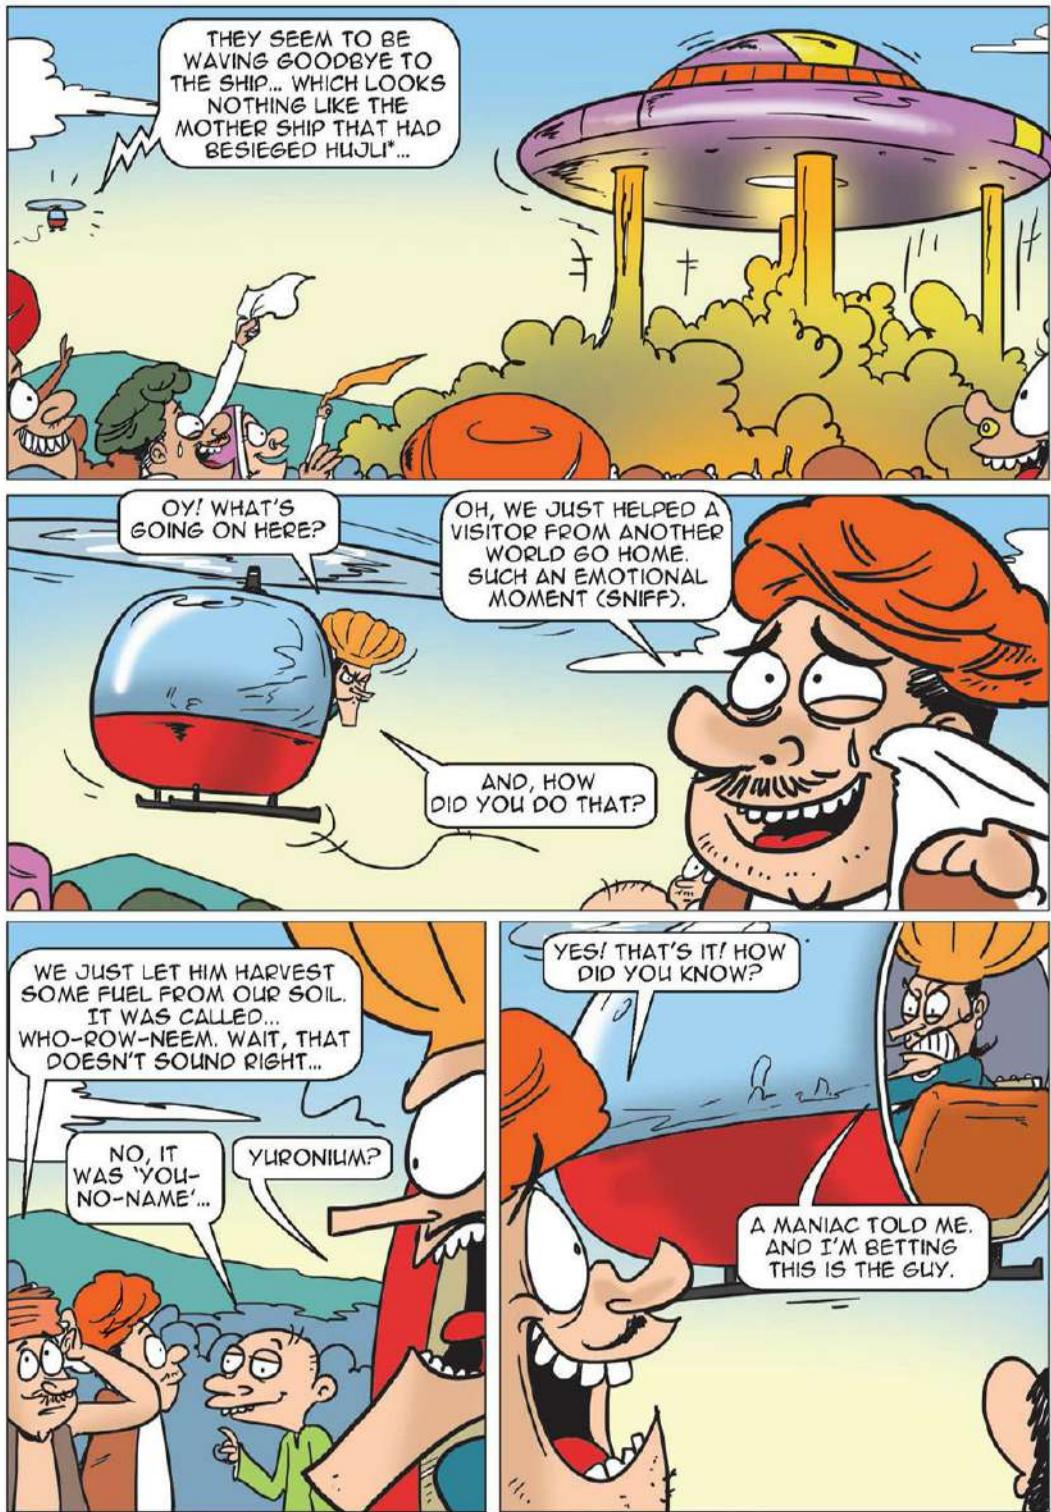

LET'S GO!

YAY!

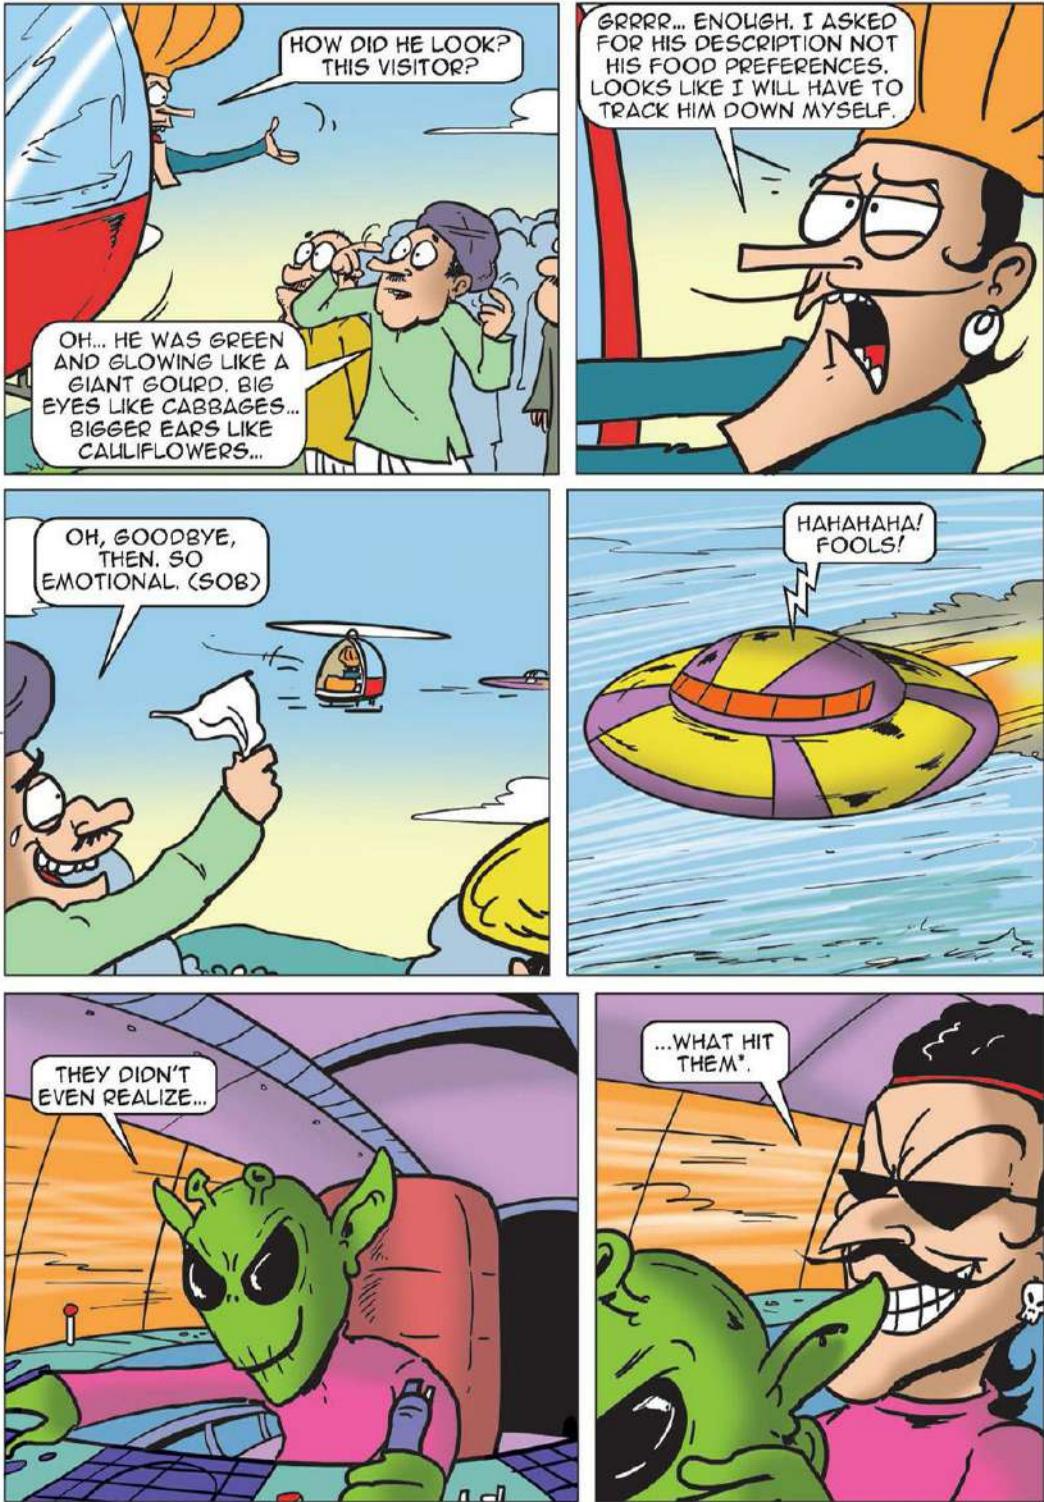

"This anonymous culprit managed to cause a huge war between Hujli and Dujli, during which I had to save Hooja. I hate my life."

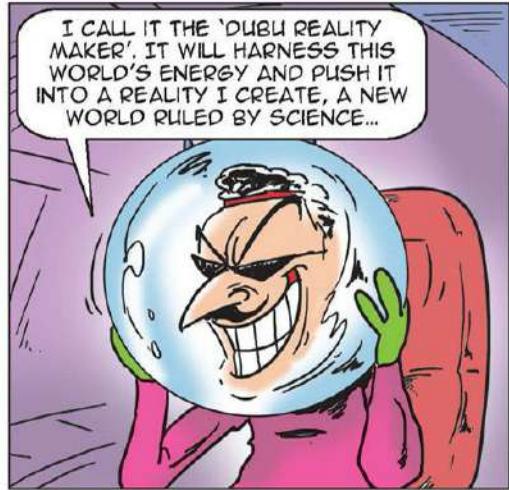

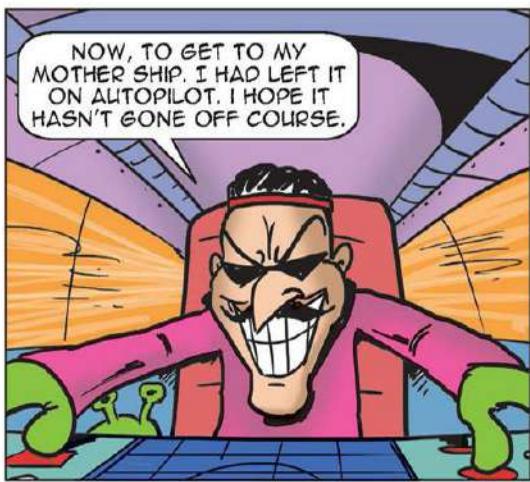

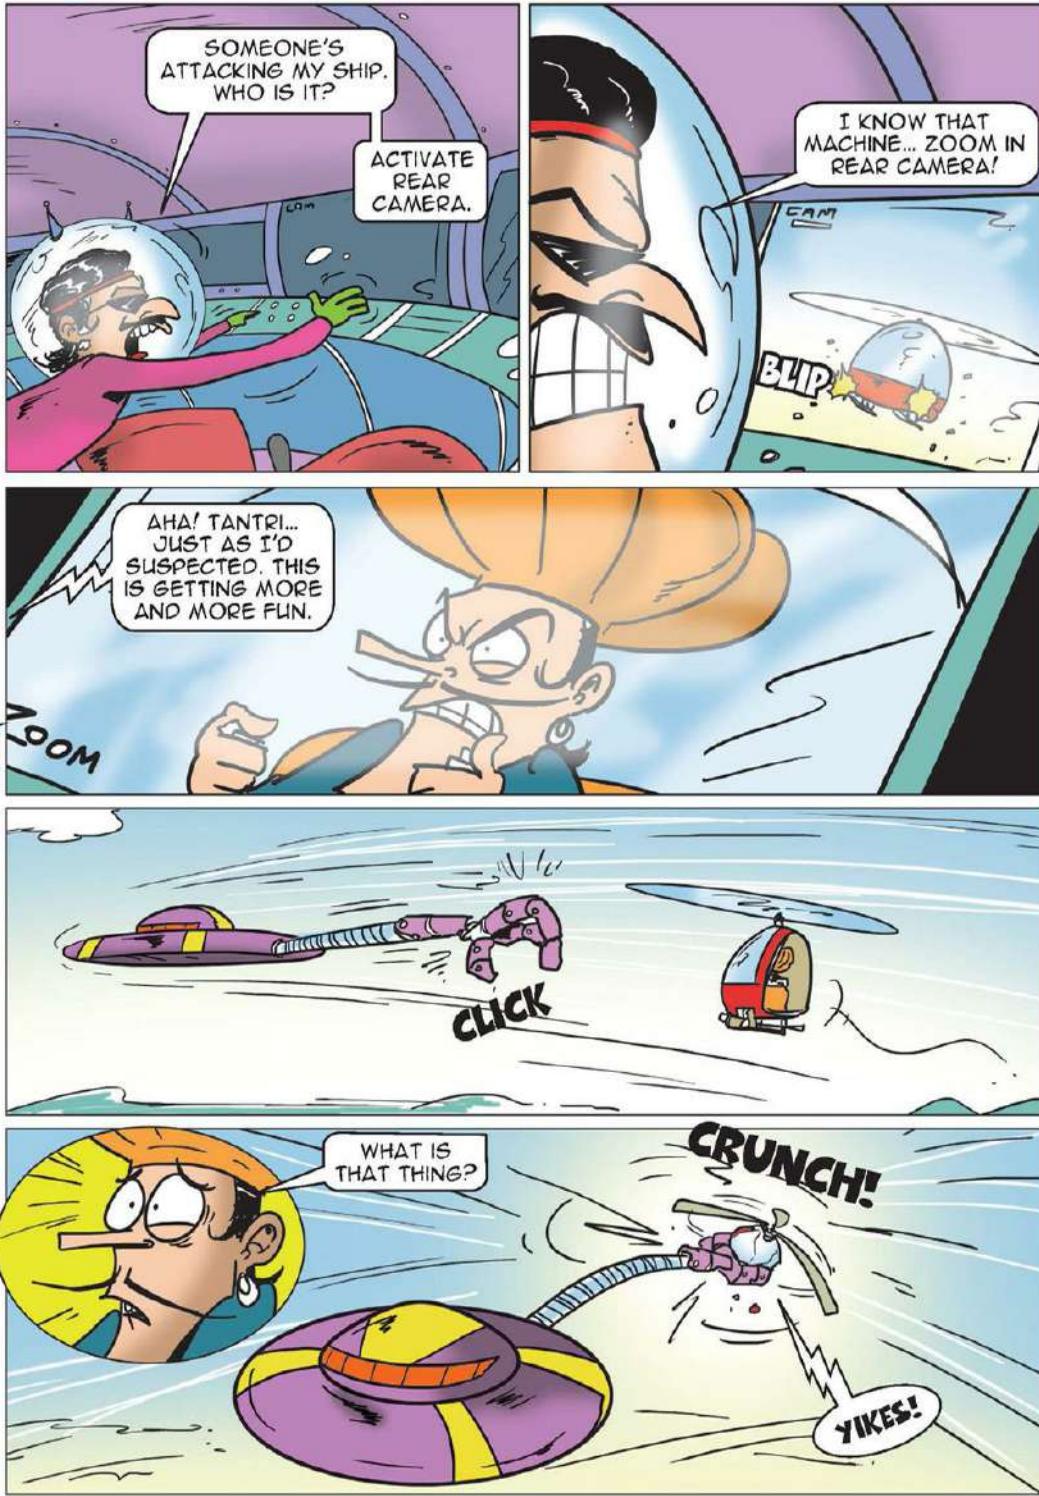

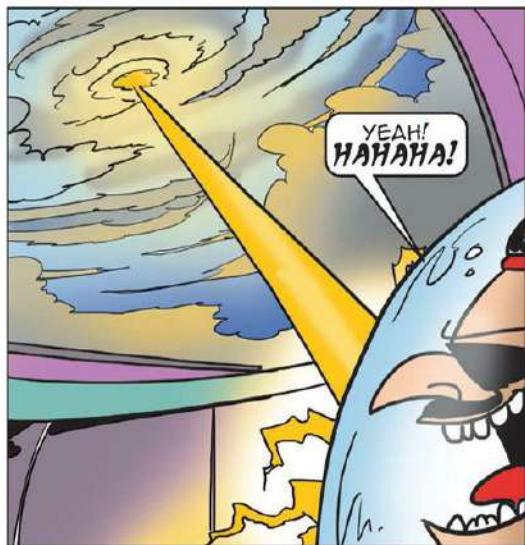

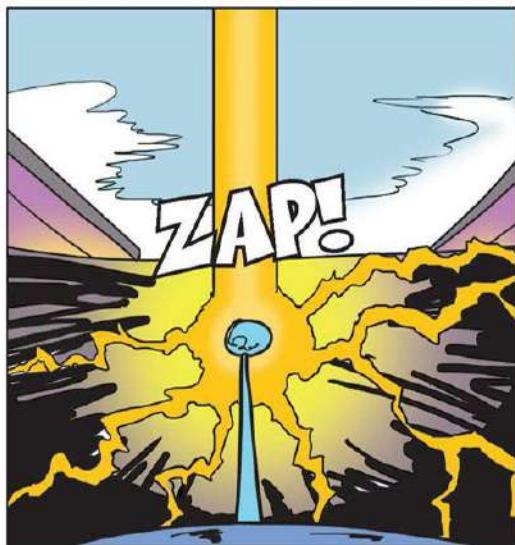

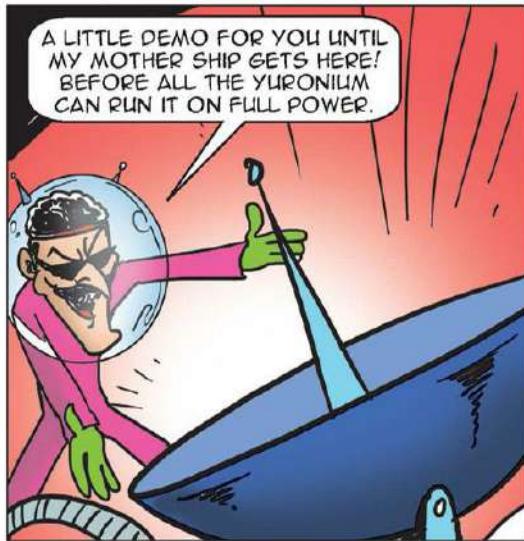

"To read more about this siege, pick up Holiday Special 40. Or just take my word for it!"

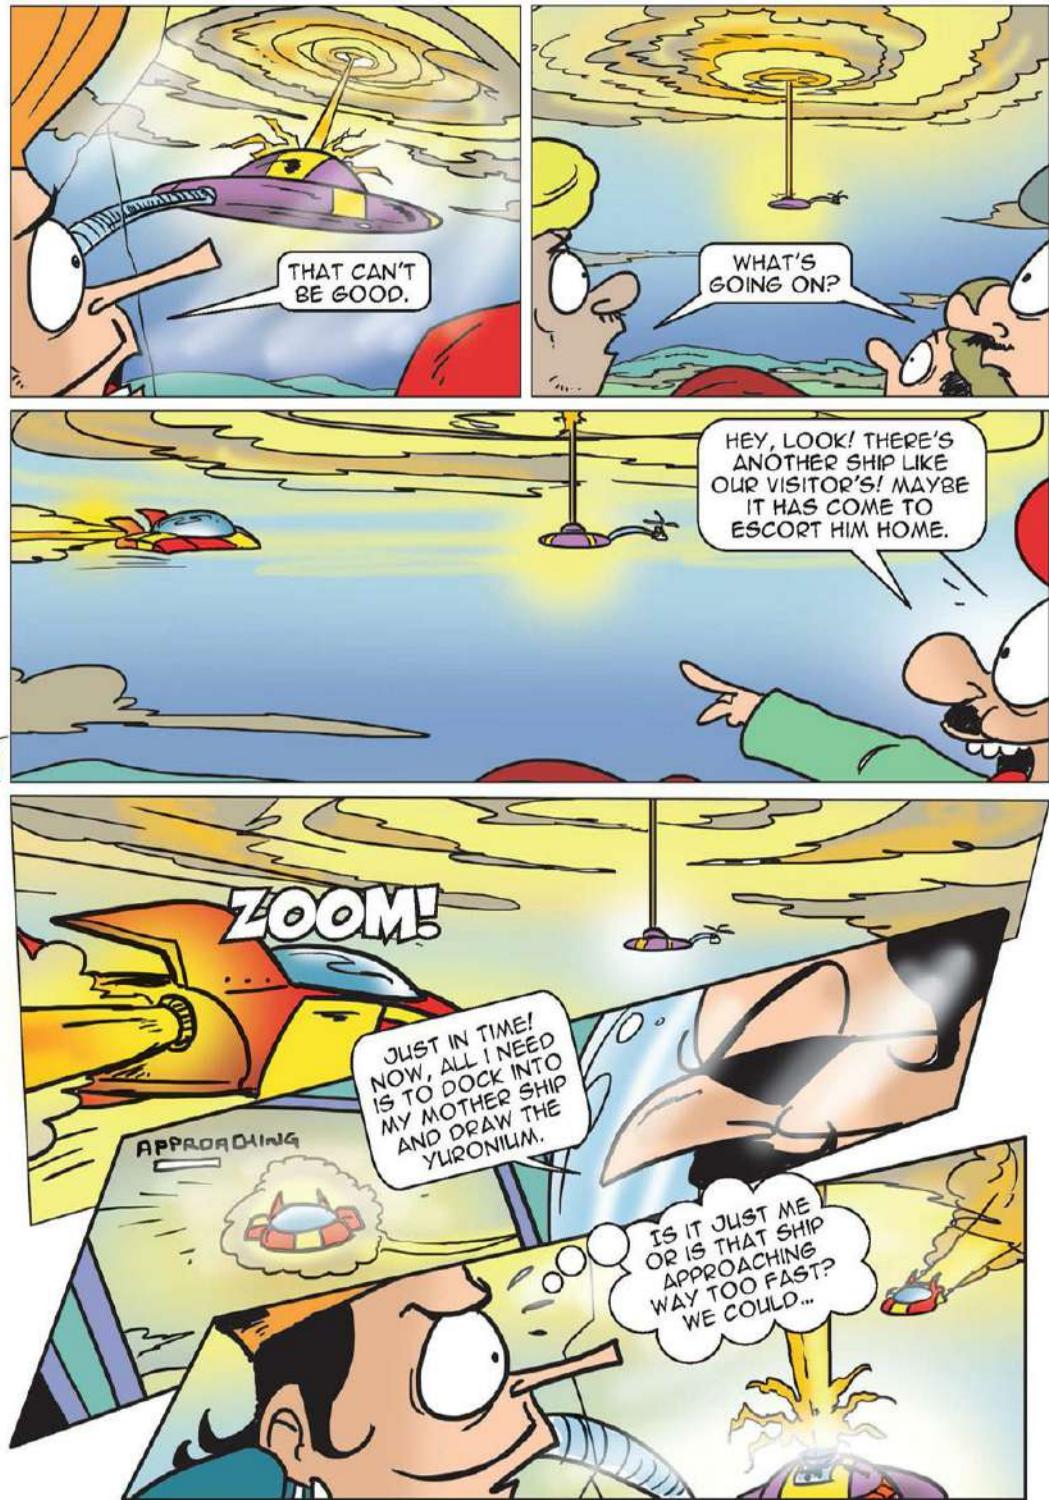

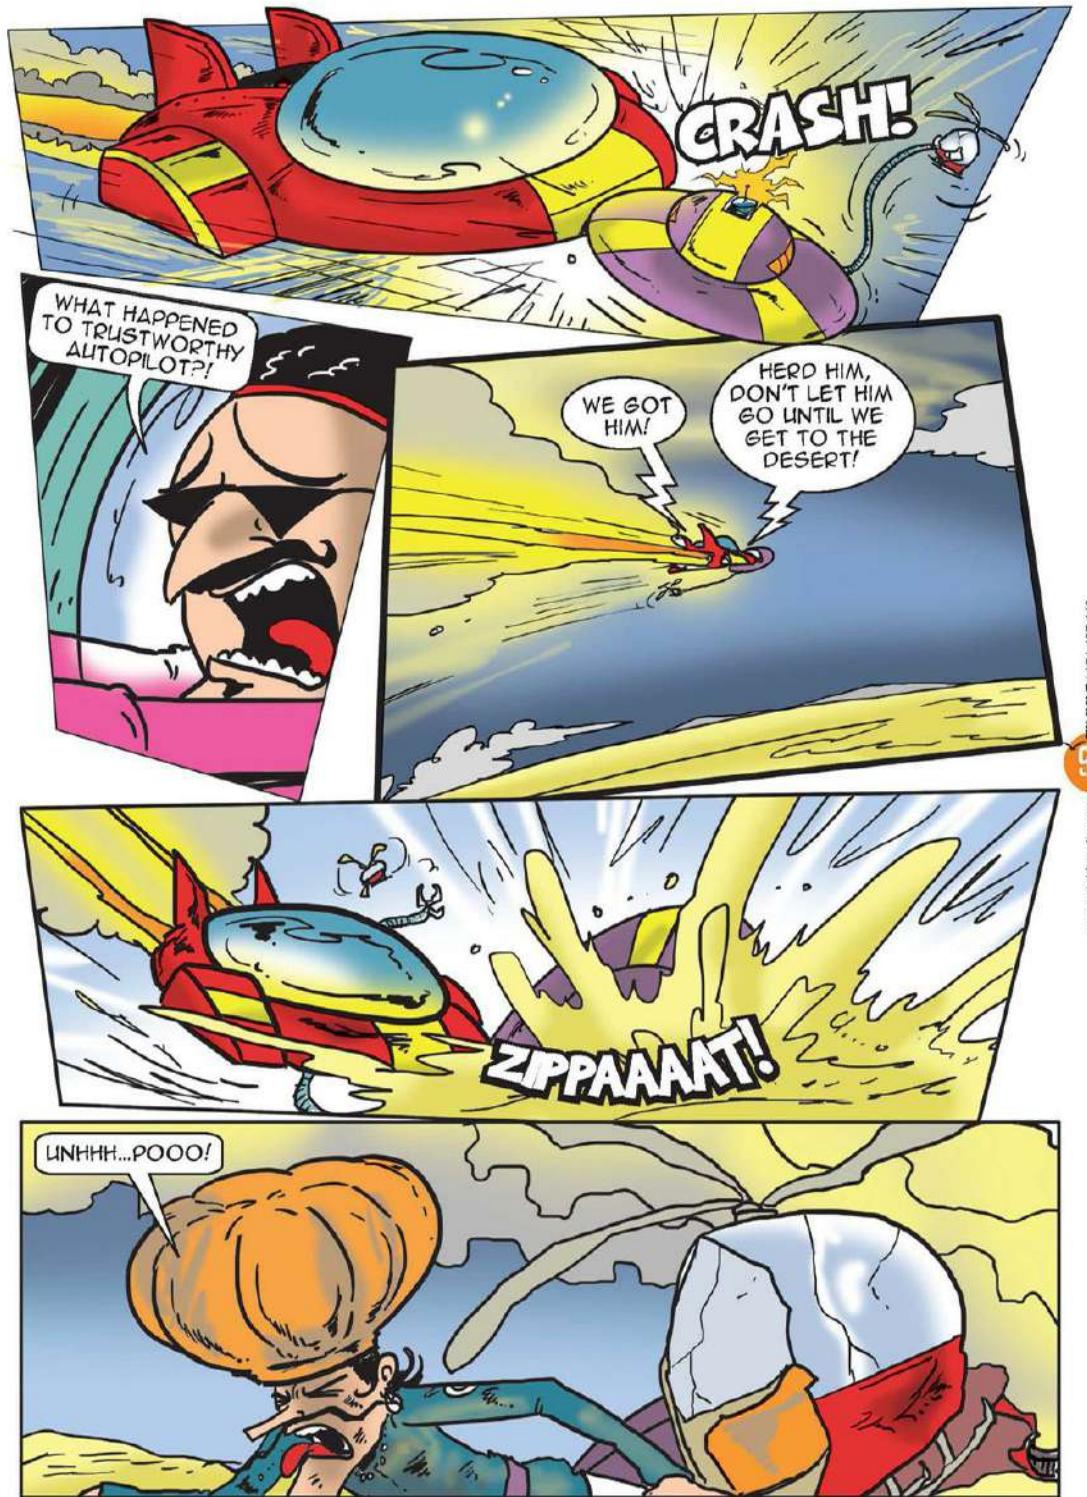

"That's right! It's me—Dushtabuddhi! And I pulled off the Hujli-Dujli war, the Hujli siege and the yuronium theft from both kingdoms. Never underestimate the power of science! Hahaha!"

 "I have an undying love for everything twisted and sinister, which makes Tantri the Mantri one of my favourite Tinkle toons. I absolutely adore his madness and badness. One day..."

...a random thought occurred to me, 'What would Tantri do if he were faced with a guy who is as evil as him, and much more powerful?' And Dushtabuddhi presented himself—a dark horse, with science on his side and a hitherto unexplored evil streak. And I couldn't resist...
